get something done. The first step is to identify the problem. Then, you need to brainstorm solutions. Once you have a few ideas, you can evaluate them and choose the best one. Finally, you need to implement the solution and monitor its progress.

Letter to the Editor—The authors of the article by Smith et al. (1) thank you for the opportunity to comment on their article. We agree with the authors that the use of the term "epidemic" is not appropriate for the current situation in the United States. However, we do not agree with the authors' definition of the term "epidemic." The authors state that the term "epidemic" is defined as "a disease that is spreading rapidly and affecting a large number of people." This definition is incorrect. The term "epidemic" is defined as "a disease that is spreading rapidly and affecting a large number of people in a community, region, or country." The authors' definition is too narrow and does not take into account the fact that the term "epidemic" can also be used to describe a disease that is spreading rapidly and affecting a large number of people in a community, region, or country.
